First kiss memories rekindled

By Brian Trotta
Daily Campus Staff

"When I was in kindergarten, there was this one red-haired boy named Eric, he was the first guy I ever kissed. I used to knock him down every recess and kiss him." — Mary F. Twilley, a fourth semester student.

Your first kiss.

For some it was an event filled with excitement and romance.

For others, it was an awkward, scary experience.

Some people don't talk about their first kiss. UConn President John T. Casteen, declined comment when asked about his first kiss.

But almost everyone remembers their first kiss, especially as Valentine's Day approaches.

These are not kisses from your godmother, the kind Frank P. Ardaiolo, dean of students, remembers: "My earliest memory is of my godmother continually trying to smother me with kisses. To this day, I get defensive about someone getting close to my face."

These are the clumsy, often misplaced first efforts between two young people.

Julius A. Elias, interim vice president for academic affairs, remembers his first kiss. "I was 18 at the time, and working at my first job. She was a co-worker, and we hit it off. I got her cornered one day, and I guess she was happy to be cornered. I couldn't believe my good fortune, that I was in love with someone, and she was in love with me."

Dances are one of the more popular places for first kisses.

Kate Hurley, a fourth semester English major, used her first kiss as a way to get

Trustees to study 'Dream Campus'

By Kathleen Brett
Daily Campus Staff

The Board of Trustees will meet this morning to hear details of the $360 million "Dream Campus" plan.

According to Debra Burns, executive secretary for the Board, the presentation will be given by Harry Hartley, vice president for finance and administration, and his staff.

The plan, which is more than 200 pages long, includes such changes as the demolition and renovation of campus buildings, as well as the construction of eight new buildings, according to Burns. The presentation will be exclusively informational, she said.

The Board of Trustees will not vote on the proposal until the April meeting, Burns said.

Roger Vogler, director of planning in UConn's Office of Facilities, said, "This study substantiates the attitudes of many people on campus who, for a long time, have complained about a shortage of office and lab space. It substantiates it and then some."

The plan, Burns said, involves the creation of a quadrangle of science buildings where the Torrey Life Sciences Building is located. The plan also includes the creation of a campus center, which will stem from the library and the humanities buildings, Vogler said.

Regardless whether the plan is approved in April, normal campus renovations and new constructions will still take place, although they are included in the present plan, he said.

McFarlane for hostages offered, Iranian says

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)— The speaker of Iran's parliament says former national security adviser Robert McFarlane offered to trade himself for American hostages in Lebanon, Tehran's official news agency reported Thursday.

Hashemi Rafsanjani said McFarlane made the offer during a secret visit to the Iranian capital last year, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported. McFarlane made the trip in connection with the Iran-Contra arms deal.

Sources in Iran with close ties to the government said Rafsanjani's political rivals tried to take McFarlane hostage during the visit.

Eight of the 26 foreigners missing in Lebanon are Americans. Most of the hostages are believed held by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem groups.

The agency quoted Rafsanjani as saying: "We told them we are not taking hostages and this is not the task of a government or our policy. If you are our friends, we will intercede and if you are our enemies, we will not do so and this is our right."

Rafsanjani has said several times that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's fundamentalist regime will ask Shiite groups holding Americans in Lebanon to free them if the United States returns assets frozen since the U.S. Embassy was seized in 1979 and Americans were taken captive.

Gay Awareness Week:

Campus gays face homophobia, harassment

By Jill Zuccardy
Daily Campus Staff

Like many freshmen, Ed was nervous about starting college. But after moving onto campus, he was soon involved in planning dormitory activities, working on student government, studying and making friends.

"I thought UConn was great," he said. "I seemed to fit right in."

But by the end of the year, it was a different story. Some people on his floor began to vandalize his room, spray painting insults on his door and harassing his parents with phone calls.

Ed, like an estimated one out of ten Americans, is gay. And his floormates' quick change in attitude toward him is an example of homophobia.

Homophobia is defined as an irrational and persistent fear of homosexuals. It can manifest itself in a variety of ways, from the extreme of "gay bashing"—beating up homosexuals—to lesser forms of physical and psychological torment. Incidents of extreme violence are rare at UConn, but many gay and lesbian students, like Ed, have experienced homophobic reactions from people in their dormitories.

"I went from having this wonderful experience one day to being an outcast the next," he said. "I don't blame everything on being gay. I've just learned that some people are never going to accept it (homosexuality)."

The department of residential life does not know the number of gay students here. If the national statistics, as estimated in the Kinsey report, are extended to the university population, about 1,600 students on campus are homosexual.

When a floormate announced Ed's homosexuality in the cafeteria during dinner, Ed became discouraged and "went into hibernation." After nearly two years of trying to deal with his friends' negative reactions to his homosexuality, Ed left UConn.

"I don't resent my time at UConn," he said. "The biggest thing that bothered me was people taking away my right to

Final student arrested in Choate drug scandal

NEW YORK (AP) — The last of 18 former students of an exclusive prep school implicated in a cocaine smuggling scandal surrendered in New York Thursday after arriving from Venezuela.

Matthew Robert Holmes, 20, appeared before Magistrate John L. Caden in Brooklyn federal court and agreed to answer charges against him in Connecticut.

He was released on a $1,000 personal recognizance bond. A hearing before U.S. District Judge T.F. Gilroy Daly in New Haven is scheduled for 9 a.m. Friday, according to authorities in Brooklyn.

Holmes' attorney, Jonathon Einhorn, said a plea agreement has been negotiated with federal authorities in Connecticut.

Holmes is expected to plead guilty to one of several drug charges that accuse him of arranging trips to bring cocaine to Choate Rosemary Hall from September 1982 to April 1984, Einhorn said.

An arrest warrant issued in October 1985 charges Holmes with possessing, importing and distributing cocaine and conspiracy to import and distribute cocaine.

The count he plans to plead guilty to carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison and a $25,000 fine, Einhorn said.

Holmes, who wore a beige sweater, a tie and green corduroy slacks, has been studying at an engineering school in Caracas, Venezuela, where his family lives. His mother, Rebecca, stood beside him during his appearance before Caden.

She would not speak to reporters and Einhorn said the family had no comment.

Federal authorities have accused Holmes of leading a cocaine smuggling ring at Choate.

$7 million in damages awarded in Klan case

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — A federal jury Thursday night awarded $7 million in damages against the United Klans of America and six past and present Klansmen in the 1981 slaying of a black teen-ager whose body was left hanging in a tree.

The verdict was awarded in the slaying of Michael Donald, 19, who was beaten and strangled three years ago.

U.S. District Judge Alex Howard said he would hold a hearing within 90 days to determine the Klan's assets and what action was needed to turn them over to Donald's family and the Alabama arm of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the plaintiffs.

No decision has been made on whether to appeal, said Klan attorney John Mays.

State Sen. Michael Figures, attorney for the Donald family, called the verdict a "landmark ruling that would make sure Donald's death was the last Klan lynching."

Earlier, a Ku Klux Klansman convicted in the killing pleaded with the all-white jury to decide in favor of the black victim's family, who brought the suit.

"Return a judgment against me and everything else," said James "Tiger" Knowles, 24, also a co-defendant.

Then, turning to Beulah Mac Donald, mother of the victim, Knowles apologized in tears before a courtroom filled with about 100 spectators.

"God knows, if I could trade places with him, I would," said Knowles, who as acted as his own attorney and was allowed to make a closing statement.

Knowles was sentenced to life in prison in the killing.

Moscow demonstration quelled by snowplows

MOSCOW (AP) — Security agents beat protesters and used snowplows to drive them off a Moscow street Thursday, the fourth day of rallies seeking the release of Jewish activist Josef Begun.

Police briefly detained 14 people, including Begun's wife and son.

The agents, who wore civilian clothes, also roughed up Western reporters and television crews covering the protest, which drew about 20 people at Moscow's Arbat shopping mall.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov later told reporters that young toughs, not security agents, were responsible for breaking up the protest.

However, it was clear at the scene that the plainclothesmen were not teen-age vigilantes. They were well-organized and were backed by uniformed police and snowplows.

All of those detained - seven at the protest site and six on their way there - were released after a few hours. Six were fined $77 for "petty hooliganism." Police also briefly detained a Western correspondent.

The protestors, many of them Jews, had been gathering daily at the Arbat mall since Monday. They demand to be allowed to emigrated and call for the release of Begun, a Hebrew teacher who was sentenced in October 1983 to seven years in prison for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

Authorities did not interfere with the demonstrations on Monday and Tuesday, but on Wednesday plainclothes agents shoved the protesters off Arbat Square.

On Thursday, the demonstrators lined up along one side of the brick-paved mall which runs through one of Moscow's oldest districts.

Valentine business blooms for local florist

By Peter Bryer
Daily Campus Staff

For the florist, the busiest time of the year is not the Christmas season, when the majority of retailers experience the greatest surge in business. Instead, the days preceding Valentine's Day are the most hectic.

"I used to really like this week," said Jack Sunmark, owner of Campus Florist who has been selling flowers for 12 years. "It's the most hectic few days of my life," he said.

According to Sunmark, what makes the holiday for lovers so difficult for him is the concentration of business. Although Christmas brings in more revenues, that season is spread out during the month of December, Sunmark said. Valentine's Day sales, however, come in just a few days.

"It's like a deadline," Sunmark said. He compared this week to that of final examinations. He said that he's under a lot of pressure and sleeps only three or four hours a night during this week.

During his dozen years as a florist, Sunmark said he has witnessed a number of romantic interludes. Four years ago, a student sent a dozen roses to a women he did not know for Valentine's Day. "He did not know the girl, only her first name and room number," Sunmark said. "By the end of the semester, they were engaged."

Program offered to aid minority students at UConn

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

While many college orientation programs may be far from unique, UConn's Connecticut Small Business Development Center will be offering a special three-day series of introductory classes in April.

These classes will be offered to 70 high-school students, mostly blacks and Hispanics, from inner-city areas throughout the state, in what John O'Connor, the center's director, said he hopes will provide them with not only a taste but also the contacts for a career in business.

"Our program has two goals," O'Connor said, "to show adults and teenagers UConn, and to set up a creative network between the teenagers and entrepreneurs."

The Teenage Minority Entrepreneurial Program, April 5 to 8, will be taught by business leaders from minority groups and similar backgrounds whom O'Connor hopes will serve as "role-models" to the students as well. "The program will teach the students what it is like to be in business from a minority perspective," he said.

Part of the program is designed to sell UConn to the students, O'Conner said. "The university has a desire to increase minority enrollment," he said, adding that the program "is consistent" with President John Casteen's recent opening speech at a University Senate meeting, where Casteen said it was UConn's "moral and statutory obligation" to help minority students get into the university.

The program is being held in April while school is in session to expose the students to a "live campus" and "show UConn in the best possible light," he said. "We want them to interact with the UConn students."

O'Connor also said he hopes the students and entrepreneurs will establish ties that will extend outside the classroom. "Our primary goal is to set up an outreach program in the small business economy," he said, adding that the enterpreneurs could offer the students help in getting started in the business world, serving as "big brothers" in offering both support and encouragement long after the

be who I am...I'm much happier now."

Homophobia has its roots in Judeo-Christian religion. In the book of Leviticus, the Bible teaches that homosexuality is a sin and indicates a death penalty for it. There are some people on campus for whom these are still "sincerely held beliefs," according to Cynara Stites, a psychiatric social worker for university health services.

"I think the problem on this campus is that people just haven't grown up yet. As people mature, they become more tolerant of people who are different. People in college are more tolerant than, say, people in high school," said Stites, who is faculty adviser for the Gay and Lesbian Association here.

"Some gay men will say that guys who are particularly homophobic are really in the closet themselves. I don't believe that at all," she said.

Students weren't tolerant of Tom's homosexuality. He lived in two different dormitories, moving after being harassed, and eventually moved off campus.

"A lot of times you can't prove who did what," Tom said. "It's just something that ends up on your door in the middle of the night."

Tom said his RA was supportive, helping him submit an incident report and alerting the head resident to the situation. Stites, who has regular requests from the department of residential life and area coordinators to conduct RA workshops on homophobia, said that, for the most part, RAs on campus are helpful.

"They do a good job of RA training and residential life is very accomodating in helping out students who are being harassed," she said. "The university personnel, faculty, DRL staff, are probably more accepting of homosexuality than the student body in general."

According to Jane Lowell, assistant director of assignments in the department of residential life, staff members handle about nine cases each semester involving gay students who want to move .

"We try very hard to be sensitive to the particular problems of gay people on campus," she said. "The program ends.

"We hope to plant some seeds," O'Connor said, "by encouraging the students to get involved in business." He said such action would hopefully not only help the students prosper but also "revitalize the economy" of the inner-city communities where the students live.

The program is being offered for the first time by the center, located at Room 422 of the School of Business Adminstration Building. "Our hope is it will be a success and become an annual event," O'Connor said. Information packets are being sent to high schools throughout the state. The program, "in its finalized stages" according to O'Connor, will be choosing from interested students in the next three to four weeks.

The rose "makes a strong statement," said Sunmark, who turned 41 on February 7. "Valentine's Day is really a holiday for lovers."

Valentine's Day was originally observed in honor of Saint Valentine, a Christian Martyr who died in Rome A.D. 270. Later, it was associated with love when it was mentioned in a Chaucer poem that it was the start of the second fortnight of the second month that the birds began to mate.

For a Valentine's Day gift, Sunmark recommended between three and a dozen roses. A dozen roses can cost from $30 to $50 and up. Roses present "a strong statement," he said.

For those who get them, the best way to care for roses is putting them in luke-warm water with some aspirin and sugar, Sunmark, a former graduate student in child development, said. By changing the water everyday, the roses can be kept healthy for at least four days, he said.

back at her boyfriend, with whom she had had a fight. She kissed another boy at a dance, in front of her boyfriend, whom she had never let kiss her.

Carol A. Wiggins, vice president for student affairs and services received her first kiss following a dance, from a boy who could play her favorite song, "Deep Purple," on his trombone.

Kristina Martell, an editor at The Daily Campus, had her first kiss somewhat accidentally in second grade.

"Me and Heidi were at recess and...what happened?" she said, trying to recall. "...there were probably no noon people around. This was awful...Heidi was really fat; he was standing behind her and I didn't see him. Heidi moved out of the way and then it was too late. I didn't cry, though."

He surprised her again when he married in high school.

Surprise wasn't the only factor that made some people's first kiss awkward.

Susan J. Krivitz, UConn's 1986 Homecoming queen was 10 years old when she received her first kiss.

"There was a group of eight kids, four boys and four girls, and we were playing Spin The Bottle. We were paired off as make-believe boyfriend and girlfriend, and whomever the bottle pointed to, had to give their partner a hug and a kiss at the same time. My partner had braces, and when he went to kiss me, it hurt. I ended up cutting my lip on his braces."

Father Mark David Janus of St. Thomas Aquinas church, remembers his first kiss as a very positive experience.

"I was in the sixth grade, there was this blonde girl named Sherry. She kissed me, and I thought it was great."

Not everyone, however, remembers their first kiss.

Ardaiolo, though he vividly remembers his godmother, doesn't remember his first passionate kiss.

"I guess that's a sign of old age, or of a very healthy marriage," he said. "In my case, I think it's the latter."

Dear Keeper of the Flame: Each time we're together, you excite my mind, body, and soul to the point of exstacy. I've learned so much from you --from the eldritch, Twilight Zone-type journeys we've shared through the realm of each other's minds. I'm sorry when I make it difficult for you to understand me, but somehow, I know you care for me despite the fact that I'm impossible to live with (or without). Who would have thought that a placid, gentle Virgo such as you and a bizarre, tempestuous Aquarian such as I could ever make a go of it? Still waters do run deep. You are wonderful as a lover, but above all, as a friend. Don't ever change. With love, the Firewitch

Lean on me
When you're not strong
And
I'll be your friend
I'll help you carry on
Lean on me
For it won't be long
Till I'm gonna need somebody
To lean on
Just call me lover
If you need a hand
We all need somebody
To lean on
I just might have a problem
That you'd understand just call me
Heart to Heart

Heffrey, Happy Valentines Day and Happy Anniversary (monthiversary?) I love you buttloads and I will forever! Are you sure you don't love me just because I always lose at Go Fish and Scrabble? Love, Moe

I SCREWED up a year and a half ago. I admit it! I hope you can find it in your HEART to forgive me! Happy Valentine's Day.
Love always, Dawn

Colleen F. of Hamilton House, we met only about a week ago, but it feels like we've been friends for months. I really enjoy your company and have fun spending time with you. Happy Valentine's Day. Love, Paul Neeraj (Trumbell 2nd floor) Hope this Valentine coming your way makes you happy on that day. Although you don't know who sent it, hope you know I really meant it.

Love, ME

Ostrich,
We've passed one and a half years; does my humble Wench wish to try to please her master for two years?
Your Lord.

Andy, We've had many ups and downs along the way- let's have many more weeks like the past one. It's been the best. Happy Valentine's Day! Get psyched! Love ya, Lynn P.S. Beware of unidentified head lights in the dark!

ROB-WITH YOU, THERE IS:
LOVE IN MY LIFE
LIGHT IN MY WORLD
HOPE BEYOND MY HORIZON
AND GOLD AT THE END OF MY RAINBOW
WITH LOVE,
YOUR SWEETNESS

PEGGY, have a Happy Valentine's Day. Love you always. XO The Golden Boy

Lynn S. You are in my IMGT classes and you were in my marketing class last semester. You are a very beautiful girl, and I want to wish you a Happy Valentine's Day. Sincerely, a secret admirer

Rufus, Happy Valentine's Day! Let's forget your psychology class (and exam!) my internship, the newspaper, and mono this weekend and concentrate on you and me-together- this Valentine's and all the rest to come. Love you hon-
Joanne

Danish
This is our weekend—Friday the 13th and Valentine's Day. I'm sure it will be great. Oh, It's just Meagain with love.

Kristy (K)
Surprise! Here is a Valentine for my favorite roomate—I couldn't ask for a better one. I'm glad you stayed. Love ya, Meeg

Dear Edina, this may be just another first in a long series; but Happy Personal and Happy Valentine's Day. Stay happy.
Love, David

DEAR GQ: JUST WANTED TO TAKE THIS TIME TO LET YOU KNOW HOW MUCH I CARE. FOR IF IT WEREN'T FOR YOUR SMILE, YOUR LAUGHTER, AND YOUR UNIQUE WAYS, I WOULDN'T BE WHERE I AM TODAY. HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY (NOW ISN'T THAT SPECIAL). I WILL LOVE YOU FOREVER.
EVY

Mark,
What more can I say, except "I love you, I love you, I love you, and Happy Valentine's Day!"
(...and I do believe I became...)

To C.S. of the GREEN house: It seems that we have bumped into each other a lot this semester. Keep it up! Take a walk on the wild side... Chris (yes, Angela's little sister) ha!

Chris, "What does a girl have to do to get you to write her?" YOU BIG GEEK! Happy Valentine's Day!
Love, Dawn

Lynn, this is our second Valentine's Day together and already it has been better than the first. We've been through some "different" times lately but that doesn't change my feelings for you! Especially on a day like today. Happy Valentine's Day, Sweetheart! Love always, Lou

Becky the awesome typist, If you're a loser, we all should be so lucky to be so nice and beautiful. Keep smiling that georgeous smile. Happy Valentine's Day. Love, Paul

Sian- I can't wait till we're sisters. Happy Valentine's Day. Love, Paul Lizard, Happy Valentine's Day! I just wanted to say that through it all we've shared some great times, and there's still room for more! I hope you'll always remember them. I will- always. Time. Let's dance! Will you be my Valentine?

Love always, Sting

Monica, Happy Valentine's Day and Happy 22nd! You are one in a million. One year down and many more to go. I love ya!! Love Mike
P.S. "M.L.P."

Dear lady in black, I was in Shippee and Jonathon's, but on which Friday did you see me in Shippee? Was it really me you were watching? What did this man look like? Interested.

Dearest Sache, wishing you all the happiness that you've brought me over the past two years. ICH LIEBE DICK SCHATZIE!! Happy Anniversary Valentine!! Liebe Bache

Tracey and Lisa- Hey kids! I hope we REALLY REALLY REALLY have a great semester! (really!)
Love Kath

Wim, Happy Valentine's Day from a special friend who owes you one!
A Bientot Suzanne

Lori: Since this is the first, I'll make it the best. I guess that's only logical since you're the best. Only a few times does someone special come along. You're that special someone. I've never been happier than during the time we've known each other. From HoJo's (gotta like room service, huh) to Pufferbellies to the Big Dipper. I've never had more fun. I guess what I want to say is that you are very special to me. I'll never let anything get in the way of our relationship. You can count on that. And I promise- no more fish as gifts! Happy Valentines Day.
Love always,
Jim

To all of my Tolland 2nd floor sweethearts (even you Brian!): Happy Valentine's Day! Tex and Krol!! I can't believe we start the mornings off together again! But I guess it's worth it after those nights! Thank goodness for the gum- no morning breath! Happy Valentines Day! Love, Heli

DENISE
Five months of the most beautiful dream ever. You. Happy SMA.
Love, Jason

To the Men of Johnny Walker: Happy Valentine's Day to four of the best! You guys are fun, hot, and sweet! Love, a friend a red confession ...to Adam it's a blush by your oceanside... always warm in the sun, abounds of laughter into moments of none...replaced by evenings in quiet carefree, and snuggled, neath' a blanket of cream and blue — dancing in perfume breezes ... telling just how much I love you.

Happy Valentines Day!

To Jana, the girl who's as much fun to talk to on the phone as she is in person. Getting to know you has been a very pleasant surprise. Happy Valentines Day. Mike (Ring, Ring).

TO MY DARLING SISTER SUE: HAPPY VALENTINES DAY. I'm looking forward to working Wednesday nights together, so I can earn the 10 bucks I owe you! Love, Mike

Oh yes Eric Sweetheart here is your red Personal. I really must tell you what interesting and good times I've had the past three months and thirteen days. I'm glad we met. So are you taking me out to dinner tomorrow night? (pushy as usual) Love, Steph.

Collector treasures Valentine's Day

SHELTON (AP)—As ephemeral as love may be, the valentine is ever close to thee. And if these words thou should doubt, collector Philip Jones will turn your head about.

Jones makes his living selling evergreen trees from his Shelton farm at Christmas time and pumpkins in the autumn, but the occasion closest to his heart is Valentine's Day.

In the past 30 years, the 68-year-old Jones has collected more than 1,500 valentines, some as much as 150 years old.

The cards range in sentiment from exquisite handmade creations of the valentine's "Golden Age" from about 1840 through the Civil War to caustic caricatures dubbed "penny dreadfuls" or "vinegar valentines," which dropped in and out of popularity throughout the 19th century.

They illustrate the history of the world's oldest card-sending holiday and one with the wealthiest trove of collectibles for people like Jones.

Of the 40,000 antique greeting cards in the Hallmark Historical Collection, 16,000 are valentines, said Sharron Uhler, curator of the collection at Hallmark's headquarters in Kansas City, Mo.

Valentines are probably the most commonly collected greeting card, and more than 300 people belong to the National Valentine Collectors Association based in Santa Ana, Calif., she said.

"I guess people tended to save their valentines more than other kinds of cards so there's millions of them packed away in attics," Jones said during an interview last week.

Jone's collection begins in the early 1800s, when the practice of sending notes to one's beloved on Feb. 14 skipped across the ocean to the United States from England, where it is considered to have begun in 1415 with a love letter written by a French prisoner of war to his wife.

In the United States, "they seem to have sprung out of Pennsylvania Dutch country," where lovers wrote messages in intertwining circles called "endless knots of love," Jones said.

Some lovers labored to make elaborate cards out of paper, lace, ribbon, and small pictures of birds, hearts, and other symbols they could buy ready made. For those besotted with love but not blessed with talent, there were books of suggested verse.

An 1834 card Jones owns is adorned with lace paper and pasted on the front is a miniature door. Behind the door is the message, "Next time you knock, don't forget the ring."

A card with the title, "Map of the Female Heart by a Gentleman," was sent on Feb. 19, 1845 in Salem, N.J. The sender outlined a simple heart and divided it into many chambers assigned qualities such as malice, vanity, jealousy, discretion, coquetry, and revenge.

Mass produced valentines appeared in Great Britain by 1810 and by the 1830s they were being exported to the United States. In 1849, Esther Howland of Worcester, Mass., introduced mass production of valentines in the United States. Still, the practice of handmade valentines persisted until World War I.

Jone's favorite antiques are the comic ones, which cost a penny and featured grotesque caricatures and stinging messages.

One entitled "Miss Puss" begins: "Oh, how I admire your long black hair. You bought it at Ridley's - and cheap, I declare."

Another shows a woman with a giant padlock through her lips and her hands cuffed behind her back. It starts, "Your mouth's a public nuisance, you old mischief-making bore!"

Briefly popular in the Victorian era were small calling cards, such as one of Jones' showing a hand holding a wreath of flowers and the sentiment, "Accept my unchanging love."

In the late 19th century some valentines were so laden with ornaments they had to be sent in inch-thich boxes. A woman named Martha sent one in 1893 that reads: "Love and I were strangers, Till you beamed upon my sight; Now he shares my joys and dangers, For he's with me day and night."

"Mechanical" cards with moving parts and three-dimensional cards appeared in Victorian times and remained strong until the 1940s, Jones said. He said the loveliest came from Germany, which had more capable color presses until the United States caught up around World War I.

Postcard valentines appeared around 1905 and dominated the ready-made market for 15 years or so, Jones said. One of his says: "I wish I had a little wife to live with me alone, To mend my coat and darn my socks and sew my buttons on."

By World War I, a look in valentines appeared that persists to this day, a style featuring cute children, hearts and comic figures.

A card mailed in 1917 shows a little girl preaching to two young boys from a soapbox. Caged in her stand are many tiny hearts and printed on it is: "No Votes. No Hearts. Votes for women."

Jones said the "golden oldie" valentines have become rare, but collectors can easily find boxes of enchanting cards at estate sales and in ephemera shops. A box of 150 might only cost $5 to $10, although, he said, rare cards may command $100 or $200.

"They're all works of art and once you get started on something, you become kind of a nut," he said.

Designer stamps his work with love

LYME (AP)—You may not know John Alcorn, but his handwork may appear on the Valentine you receive next wek.

Alcorn was asked by the U.S. Postal sservice to design a Love stamp last year and the stamp — with his design — went on sale last week. The Lyme resident says he is flattered to be asked to design the stamp but "out of the millions of Love stamps that will be sold, maybe one one-thousandth of 1 percent will know who designed the stamp."

The 52-year-old graphic artist shrugs his shoulders and says, "The recognition would be nice, but it's not terribly important. My primary intention was to make something attractive and appealing."

Alcorn, who is a partner in a design group with offices in New York City, was selected to design the Love stamp by the Citizen's Stamp Advisory Committee, a 15-member group appointed from the public by the Postmaster General that meets several times a year. The committee was established by the Postmaster General in 1957 and recommends what commemorative stamps should be done and selects artists to do them.

"It's very difficult (to design a stamp) because of the miniature artwork involved. It's quite a complex project, " said Dickey Rustin, manager of the stamp information branch of the U. S. Postal Service in Washington, D.C.

Although the U. S. Postal Service is planning more than a dozen commemorative stamps for 1987, the Love stamp is usually one of the hottest sellers as well as one of the biggest money-makers for the service, Rustin said.

"Outside of Christmas, the Love stamp is the most used stamp. It carries a message, a universal subject and people find the stamp adds to their correspondence," Rustin said in a telephone interview.

The 1987 Love stamp is orange, red, yellow and green and shows a flower inside of a heart. The word "LOVE" is printed above the heart.

"Love is an abstraction and in that sense, it was difficult to do," Alcorn said. "It's easier to do a very specific image, like ducks or something."

Alcorn, who is married and has three children, served as art director for the Columbia Broadcasting System in the 1950's. His work has been shown in numerous exhibitions including those in New York, Paris, Venice and Milan.

The Love stamp is his first work for the postal service. "The most difficult part was coming up with a concept for love because there are all kinds of love," Alcorn said.

The Love stamp was first issued in 1973 and sold for 8 cents. Last year's stamp featured a puppy. The stamp is popular for Valentine's Day and for the upcoming wedding season, Rustin said.

Normally, the postal service produces 160 million stamps of each commemorative lot, but plans to produce at least 800 million Love stamps this year, Rustin said.

The commemorative stamps -- featuring holidays, famous people or history — help dress up envelopes, educate people and make the postal service money, Rustin said.

"The philatelic department (of the postal service) produced about $158 million in revenue last year," Rustin said. "People like pretty colorful stamps."

There have been commemorative stamps of wildlife services, a presidential series and a Bicentennial series. There was a volunteerism series and a physical fitness series.

There have been a few commemorative stamps that failed, Rustin said. He said stamps of historical agencies aren't very popular. And, the alcoholism stamp made a few years ago to promote treatment of alcoholics, failed miserably.

"Some of the stamps fail because they carry a message the people can't relate to," Rustin said. "In the case of the alcoholism stamp, people were afraid if they put the stamp on a letter, the person receiving it would think it had a double connotation."

Real estate club lands at UConn

By Gary Shaboo
Campus Correspondent

Real Estate. Say those two words and persons of lesser understanding shrink away amidst yawns and half-lidded eyes.

But au contraire! In human history and pre-history nothing else has surpassed the value that we have placed on territorial possession:

Our Declaration of Independence,upon which this nation bases its precepts of Americanism, is more of a document asserting the human right to own property than a code of general civil rights;

The first constructive act peasants did during the Russian and French revolutions was divvy up the nobility's lands (they chopped heads , too, but this came later);

What do the Jews, Palestinians, and every other self-respecting nationality desire more than anything else? A homeland.

Democracy, Morality, and Reeboks all take a backseat to this commodity and patiently wait for their place in the sun while the world's billions finish their scrambling and scratching for primo real estate.

Real Estate Fever has similarly taken hold of at least two UConn entrepeneurs who seek to form a Real Estate club--a veritable temple of terra firma. Students Jeff Beaudoin and John Ramous hope to spread the Messainic Word "Buy Low, Rent High" and extol the plusses of their club's namesake with the same fervor that the Finance, Ski, and Chess clubs pay homage to their own.

However, even the hardiest land-lovers are forced to admit that anyone can be turned off by real estate especially by the terms used within its circles: "Callability Risk, Condominiumizing, Worthless." The risk involved is also ever-present. If the government happily trumpets "Eminent Domain" in your direction, for example, then your're forced to witness Progress build a fat power station or dam for the "public good" on top of your investment. Say good-bye to doubling your money quick and hello to fifty-cents-on-the-dollar reimbursement.

Fortunately, Beaudoin and Ramous are planning to offer guidance through the dark and dank markets of Florida swampland and hope to steer their fellow property proselytizers away from "beach

...campus gays cope with harassment

harassment can be extreme for that group of students and for that reason we like to keep an open door."

But, Lowell said the department "cannot and does not make exceptions to regular policy just because a student is gay." For action to be taken on behalf of a gay student, it must be a case of harassment. And, on the other hand, "you can't get rid of your roommate because he or she is gay," she said.

Ed and Tom each said that when they told their roommates they were gay, the roommates said they were not bothered. The insults and harassment came from students gathered in groups.

"There's homophobia in numbers," Ed said. "One on one, people are fine, but in a group they're the same ones jeering and chanting."

Stites said this may be attributed to the belief that if a straight man or woman is seen associating with a homosexual man or woman, people might believe that the straight individual is gay.

"Society doesn't allow straight men to touch each other or express affection," she said. "God forbid you should put your arms around someone and say you care about him...people will say you are gay."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which has a high rate of occurence among gay males, has encouraged homophobia in many people. But Stites said she doen't believe AIDs has created homophobia.

"If you say 'I don't want to be near gay people because I'm worried about getting AIDS,' people can sort of line up behind you," she said. "I think it allows people who are homophobic to find a socially-accepted way to express it."

Stites said she is afraid that the negative attitude of some students might discourage people on campus who are homosexual to "come out."

"Often, students at UConn may still be going through the process of discovering they are homosexual," she said. "It has detrimental effects on (a gay student's) self-esteem when people are making jokes about 'fags.'"

But even with the potential for harassment from other students, Ed said he believes that the university is "a safe place to come out because there's a support group." The Gay and Lesbian Association here meets weekly as well as conducting the Gay/Straight Rap and sponsoring social events. A lesbian support group, Moonrising, also meets on campus.

One member of the Gay and Lesbian Association said his homosexuality has not affected his life in the dormitory because he doesn't talk about it to anyone. But the subject of homosexuality was discussed in one of his classes, when a student said he was afraid of gay men.

"When the teacher discussed it, there was winces," he said. "It's is a subject everybody knows about, but no one will really talk about."

front" property in Colorado. Enlightenment may come from invited speakers in the field, seminars and discussions about real estate's whys and wherefores, field trips (to Century 21?) and advice.

"We will not only open new avenues to real estate's possibilities for our members, but they will also gain valued insights and understanding into the meaning of real estate itself," explains Beaudoin. "It seems to seem that one has to deal with real estate at one time or another and this club will make it a much more palatable subject."

And hopefully a new money-making opportunity will be realized?

"Of course," agrees Ramous. "Real estate is a very profitable and relatively easy way to be successful--if one knows how to go about it and if the ambition is there."

There are myriad ways to make money in today's market. Condominiums almost double in value in a few years after they are bought and can be sold for large profit. Weighty house mortgages can be erased through subletting and a tidy profit can be turned in the process.

Yeah,but it's still so Boring! Boring! Boring! Yeah, but Money! Money! Money!

For those majoring in Business, Manegment, Insurance, Finance,
Hostile Corporate Take-Overs and all the other fun-loving categories of white-collar America that make her business world buzz, real estate is an unavoidable, inescapable, and yet ultimately conquerable realm that need not be shied away from anymore.

People will always need someplace to stick to. Money is glue, and there are those few who own the flypaper-- no, scratch that.
Well,whatever inane analogy is used, real estate demands attention in every walk of life and the Real Estate club hopes to make everyone's respective walk a little easier. Those wishing to help organize and contribute to the Real Estate club call 487-6619 and remember what Alexander the Great said about real estate: "I want more."

Another hurdle jumped in sports center race

The best athletic move of the week was not made by a scholarship athlete or an intramural basketball player. Rather, it was the moves of the state legislature's Finance, Review and Bonding Committee, that equaled a a game-winning grand slam or a 360-degree slam dunk any day.

The sight of this occurence was not a swimming pool or a basketball court—it was at the state capitol in Hartford. The committee unanimously approved an extra $5 million to build the long-delayed sports center. The additional bonding now faces a vote in the state Senate and the state House, but committee members said it should have no trouble passing.

President Casteen, along with a few musclemen, spent Thrusday's morning hours trying to persuade the committee that the money and the sports center are desperately needed. Harry Hartley, vice president for finance and administration; Jim Calhoun, men's basketball coach; and Dee Rowe, former basketball coach; were among the many supporters who attended the public hearing, although not all testified before the committee.

Fortunately for UConn, their pleas and wishes did not go unanswered.

It is satisfying to see that the legislators realize the incredible need for a new sports center. The past two weeks have been harrowing for UConn officials as they scurried to pick up the pieces left in the aftermath of the extra $5 million. Many legislators began to doubt whether the a new sports facility was worth the inflated price tag.

But Thursday's decision made all the worrying worthwhile. The plans for spring groundbreaking appear to still be intact and the sports center may not be to far in the distance.

'Be my Valentine'

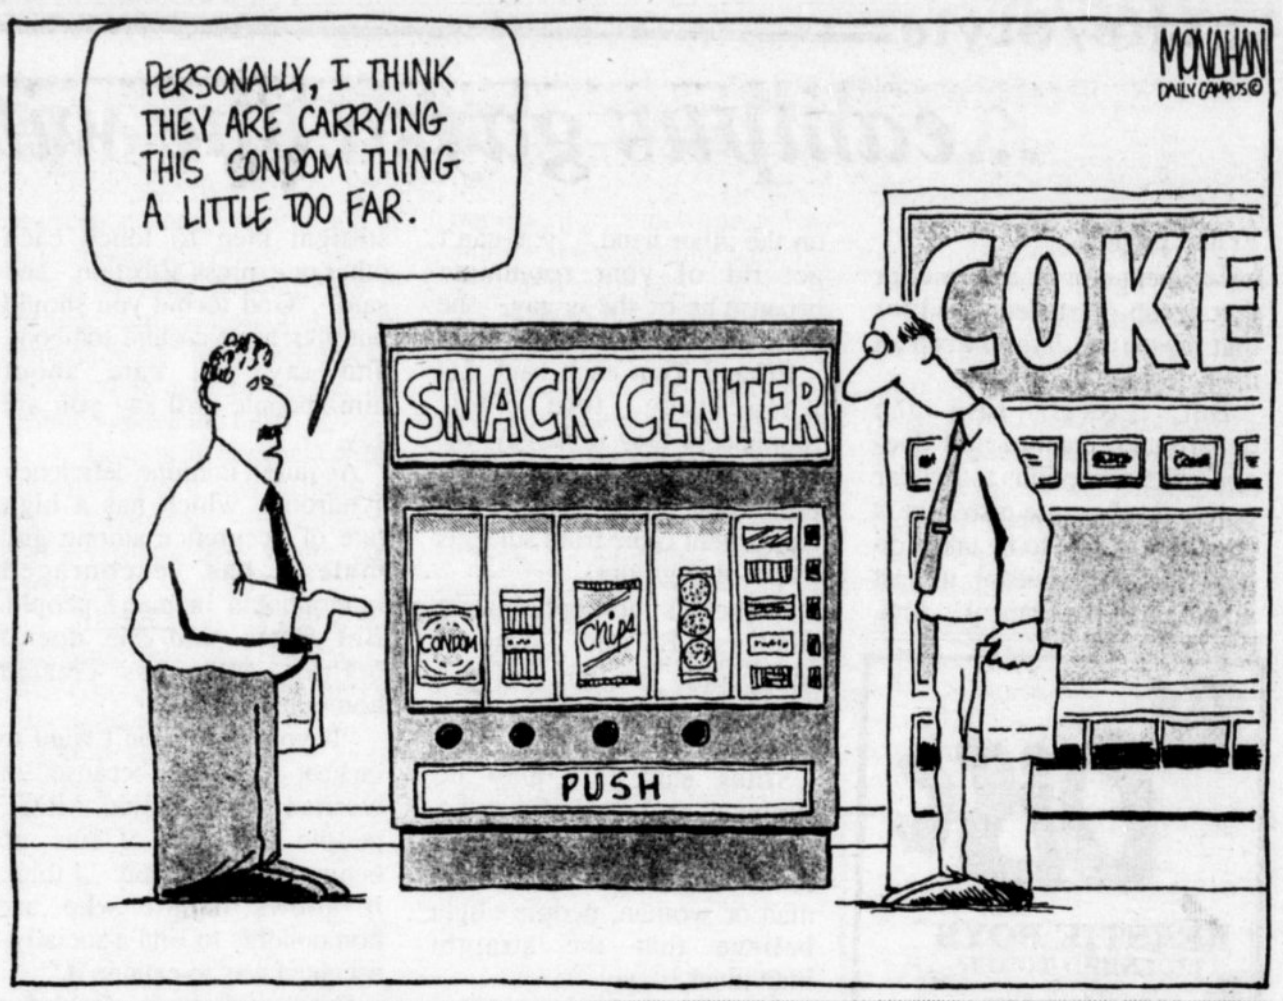
Love is an irresistible desire to be irresistibly desired.

Robert Frost

Even if a person currently has no "love of his/her life," they can still appreciate Valentine's Day. It's as simple as remembering back to the day's of youth, when every elementary school-aged child would send and receive multitudes of small cards asking their classmates to be their Valentine.

However, things are not as easy these days. The opposite sex is no longer pleased with a simple card. A complete Valentine's Day extravaganza must include flowers (usually roses, which sell for more than $30 a dozen), wine (and not just the cooking variety), dinner (McDonalds is nice, but not on this day), and often a gift (a red personal alone hardly provides adequate satisfaction).

Of course, if, because of uncontrollable circumstances, the Hallmark Holiday (as it has been called) is spent alone, there is no reason to fret. The money saved can be well spent on some new clothes or even the books you still haven't bought.



Bob Greene

Hey, anybody! Send money

"The way I see it," she said, "this is an ethical delimma. Do I place the ad in the newspapers, or don't I"

She is 39 years old; she lives in Colorado with her two children. For 13 years she was married to a successful man, but recently she left him. The reason: He has a drinking problem that she could no longer tolerate.

"I've been out of the job market for 14 years," she said. "Before I got married I was a teacher and a secretary. Being married, though, I got used to a very nice upper-middle-class existence.

"Now, after leaving my husband—which was the hardest decision I ever had to make—I am facing the reality of the job market. It looks like I will have to work two full-time jobs to pay four our house and make ends meet. And if I work two full-time jobs, what kind of time does that leave me for my children?"

It was thinking about that question that made her compose the newspaper ad.

The ad is very simple—intended to be run in the classifieds section.

"CAN YOU HELP? Wanted: a person to voluntarily pay $100 each month in exchange for good feeling of aiding lady so she can keep her self-respect. Lady does not date, does not intend to remarry, is not a bar person; just a quiet, mostly self-reliant lady who needs a little money to make ends meet and raise two children. Prefer privacy, but will share documented information and circumstances, if desired."

At the end of the ad, she would put her first name and a post office box number.

"I don't know what to do about this," she said. "I've done a lot of soul-searching about the moral implications of asking strangers for money. One of the things that has bothered me most is, if someone gave money to me, would I be preventing some small starving child in Africa or India from getting a donation that would keep that child alive? Or closer to home, would a donation to me keep people in the ghettos or Appalachia from realizing some benefit? I've wrestled with this question for weeks. Although we have had to cut down on our food costs, we aren't starving, and there are people who are."

She said that she does not know if anyone would even respond to such an ad. "I guess what I'm looking for is good old-fashioned kindness—someone who feels good by helping someone else.

"I happen to think that there are people out there who would respond to the ad. They would probably be people who have more money than they need, people who are more than comfortable. Maybe they would prefer giving money to an individual over giving money to an organized charity."

She said she has not decided under what ground rules she would operate this relationship. "I would be very wary of revealing myself, other than the post office box," she said. "I might correspond with the people who sent the money. But I wouldn't want the address of my house going out to perfect strangers. On the other hand...I'm asking perfect strangers for money, so I suppose they would have a right to know who I am."

She is convinced that if she does run the ad, "More people will be against it than for it. America is based on the idea that you go out and do everything you can, and if you can't do any better, then you live with that. I know a lot of people will read the ad and say, 'Where does she get off?' And I guess the only answer I have is that I'm really a nice person with a problem."

She said that she can count on money from her estranged husband only sporadically. And would she consider applying for welfare?

"Never," she said. "I would never do that."

But why not? Isn't what she's planning to do basically the same as a private version of welfare?

"First of all, I wouldn't be eligible for welfare," she said. "I'm still going to get at least one job, even if I do this. And second of all, this is not the same thing as welfare. I'm not asking the government to give me money. I'm not asking the taxpayers to give me money. I someone decides to send me the money every month, that person will have made the decision of free will."

If she does, indeed, place the ad, she is prepared to deal with the negative reactions it will get. "I can live with some people being angry with a person who would do this," she said.

"I know that it may be considered begging, but I consider it begging for a good purpose."

She said that it comes down to one thing:

"The moral has to do with asking for help. Should you ask for help or not? If I asked for help shoveling the snow off my driveway, chances are someone would say yes. If I asked for help getting a ride somewhere, chances are someone would say yes. But asking strangers to send you money... I don't know."

Lack of attention is eroding education systems

State Education Commissioner Gerald Tirozzi said last semester that "we're trying to promote the art of teaching as a true prestigious profession." He offered only a single pair of reasons for identifying teaching as a "profession" in Connecticut's public schools: the recently voted salary increases and a boost in the academic standards required of teacher candidates.

This article is a response, as a recently retired high school science teacher (18 years), who also taught college (seven years) and who spent an added 10 years in the chemical and allied industries. Currently, I am writing and broadcasting a new radio program (WMMM 1260 AM, Westport), Education Upbeat in which I cite individual students, teachers, counselors and administrators for excellence in listenership area public schools. It seems unfair of the commissioner to provide such a limited view to intelligent young people about what it means to make a serious commitment as a Connecticut public school teacher.

What's good about being a teacher? The intrinsic rewards can be enormous. You have a daily opportunity to exercise a strong positive influence on your students. The responsibilities are awesome. you can help to develop and improve student abilities. You can stimulate them to greater effort and achievement. You can share your enthusiasm, your knowledge, your skill, your interests, feelings and ideas in ways that may improve the quality of their lives now and in the future. The personal rewards are probably unequalified in most other adult activites.

Nevertheless, I suggest that students interested in a teaching career avoid full-time classroom experiences until at least five years after college graduation. Teaching job opportunities will remain abundant. Forget about loan forgiveness programs designed to lure you into teaching immediately after graduation. Take the loan if you must, but instead of writing it off by teaching for five years, pay it off out of your post-graduate earnings. If you are competent, even though the market work place is changing rapidly, you are likely to find a challenging and rewarding job in business or industry.

Although the risks are greater, you may be able to more than double your income in 14 years, which is the promise held out in education - unless you transfer to another school district. It is customary, upon transfer, to place a teacher in a lower salary step regardless of the prior experience or level of earning up to that time. This will also affect your retirement income during your later years.

A recently published national survey showed that on the average, bachelor degree holders are likely to start at a salary level slightly greater than 21,000 dollars, while masters degree graduates may begin at around 26,000 dollars and doctorates can expect 30,000 dollars or more.

After five years of real-world experience, you will be better able to function as effective counselors to students. You can make a worthwhile contribution to the content and presentation of curriculum based on your experiences. Your greater maturity will help you to decide more realistically how you will be able to achieve your personal, professional and financial goals as a public school teacher.

Teaching is not yet a profession in the same ways as is medicine, dentistry, or law. There is no well-established body of knowledge and skill in education that would entitle you to be licensed to not only diagnose problems but to also prescribe solutions. Professional teacher education and training, at best, might be charitably described as an experience in intellectual bankruptcy. Most learning is done out of textbooks. You write papers and take exams. Your professional status is determined by how many credits you accumulate for "certification."

There is no clinical experience before you are assigned to a classroom. There is very little reason why you will find better ways to teach your students compared with the ways you were taught. Teaching is really an interdisciplinary activity. In addition to excellent academic credentials, teachers need to know much more than is made available about the match between student development and the ability to learn.

The relationships are often subtle and have to do with such seemingly obscure ideas as biochemical imbalances and developmental difficulties which an astute teacher can detect in a classroom setting. These concepts are virtually ignored. If you take time to search out the names of public school teachers who were invited to participate as members of any of the various national task force of commission groups during the past five years, you will find a few, if any.

Your experiences, as a teacher, will be largely ignored. Perhaps you will want to ask Dr. Tirozzi how many of these problems have already been successfully resolved before you sign in as a teacher. You may also be aware that the most productive people in the most productive organizations are those who have the opportunity to participate in making decisions that affect their professional lives.

Most school systems are managed by people trained and educated in the outmoded "industrial model" of the school. The principal is "plant manager." Teachers are "workers". Students are the "raw materials" to be processed. Little actual attention is given to individual student differences. In most school districts, teachers are not treated as full, professional participants.

Policies are made by the local Board of Education, responding to community political pressure and the mandates of the state law. When American business and industry are in trouble, or when the military do not perform well, attention is focused on top management.

No one has asked about the competency of school boards or about the need for improvement in the quality of school leadership of the superintendent or the principals. The 1986 Carnegie Forum report on precollege education has called for total redesign of what happens and how it happens in American public schools. It seems unlikely that the structure of schools will change., You may never see the day when teachers will be asked for their professional opinions on the quality of school leadership.

School principals across the nation told the National Governors Association subcommittee on school leadership-management (Governor O'Neill is a member of this group) that the expectations for themselves are not clear and that many of them feel they are not trained to do what they need to do to provide leadership. School leaders and teachers more often react to public pressures rather than serving as leaders who bring ideas to the public. They are ofen under pressure to achieve the single most important, however dubious, objective: to raise the standardized test score level in the community's schools, as the single most important measure of the "quality " of education.

The explicit nature of these problems among Connecticut's public school teachers is graphically reported in the 1986 report entitled Jobs for Connecticut's Future. The Carnegie Forum report has recommended that standardized test scores be abandoned as a condition for college admissions. One of the nation's leading educational researchers, John Goodlad, former dean of education at UCLA, has confirmed the fact that "teaching is, as yet, a weak profession, not firmly established on strong underpinnings of biological, sociological and behavioral knowledge".

There is a strong possibility that professional teacher education and training will trap teachers as victims instead of being beneficiaries of these experiences. People interested in becoming teachers ought to give careful thought to these conditions of employment. In spite of these ever present problems, you may be sufficiently interested in teaching to focus your attention on student needs.

The overwhelming amount of "educational reform" enacted by various groups across the nation has added more school days, more school hours, more homework, more testing (but not necessarily more remediation) and higher standards for course content and academic achievement. All of this assumes that the alleged improvements in the quantity of time and the quality of teaching will lead directly to an increase in the qualtiy of learning.

The student in his/her role as "learner" and "time keeper" remain largely ignored. The National Governors Association has warned that by 1991, minority groups will make up at least 25 percent of the nation's public school students. Half the students in school will be from single-parent families. One out of four will be living in poverty. How well-prepared will you be professionally to do your best to help meet the needs of these young people?

People who really care will also be risk-takers, not just acquiescent public servants. They will speak out instead of waiting to be spoken for. The conditions associated with being a teacher will have to be a challenge rather than a burden. Maximum rather than minimum personal and professional competency are needed. Whether or not school leadders are willing or able to help provide the conditions under which such teachers can thrive is a large unanswered question. The public will continue to criticize. Often the criticisms are justified, but so little credit is given for the excellence achieved.

Good teachers often are heroic in their efforts and their results. There is a "user-fee syndrome" among the public. "I don't have kids in schools, so why should I pay taxes to support education!" With fewer than 20 percent of the nation's families having children in the nation's public schools, the future may not be as promising as we would hope. No doubt there will be differences of opinion over this insider view into some of the unresolved problems teachers face.

If letters like this force us all to grapple more effectively with the problems, public education may come closer to fulfilling its promise. I urge you to be fair to yourselves. No workplace situation will ever be ideal. Before you decide to be a public school teacher, consider all the facts. If teaching is still your choice, go for it, with the full knowledge of its significance to you, to your future and to what is important in your life. Thank you for sharing these thoughts with me.

Mikado delights at Jorgensen

By Eric Swanson
Campus Correspondent

Last night's performance of "The Mikado" was fun for most of the play, but there were parts where the audience had trouble understanding what the characters were singing; therefore much of the comedy was missed.

"The Mikado," a classic Gilbert and Sullivan comedy set in a Japaneses town , is about two young lovers who want to get married, and the people around them who stand in their way.

Nanki-Poo is the man who comes to the town of Titipu in order to marry Yum-Yum but it turns out that she is the ward of Ko-Ko and he wants to marry her. From here, the plot begins to get confusing.

It turns out that Ko-Ko has been appointed Lord High Executioner and, for the crime of flirting, he is the first person on his list of those to be beheaded. Ko-Ko then learns that his post is to be abolished by the Mikado for non-performance of duty.

While searching for a victim, Ko-Ko comes upon Nanki-Poo, who is going to commit suicide. They strike a deal where Nanki-Poo will be allowed to marry Yum-Yum if he will submit to the executioner's axe at the end of the month.

The rejoicing is abruptly halted by the arrival of Katisha, an elderly lady of the Mikado's court who thought that she was going to marry Nanki-Poo. Denied in her efforts to claim Nanki-Poo as her lover, she tries to reveal his true identity, but the shouting of the others won't allow her to do this either.

Nanki-Poo and Yum-Yum's wedding plans are interrupted by Ko-Ko, who tells them that, by law, if a married man is beheaded, his wife is buried alive; thus prompting Yum-Yum to have second thoughts.

As the Mikado arrives, Ko-Ko panics and decides to send away the two lovers to get married and produce a phony "certificate" of Nanki-Poo's execution. The Mikado is

Milton Bradley designer teaches through games

By Jennifer Berry
Daily Campus Staff

"I feel like one of Santa Claus's elves," said Michael Gray, chief game designer for the Milton Bradley Company. "My job is not something I can stop doing when I get home, because I'm an inventor. It's an obssession," he told the English 200 children's literature class yesterday afternoon.

Gray has been designing games for the Milton Bradley Company in East Longmeadow, Mass. since 1978. "During the last ten years the game business has changed," Gray said. There's been everything from electronic hand-held games to video games to the Trivial Pursuit craze, he said. "Toys are now being developed that interact with the television set."

A lot of thought goes into making a successful game. Gray said he takes into consideration what the game is about, who will be playing it, how long it is, and how much it will cost. "All these things weigh on what I do," he said.

"When I make a game, I like to make it something worthwhile," Gray said. "It must require some decision making by the players. I want to teach children that you can alter the future by the decisions you make."

Gray said decision-making games teach children patience and that they're not always going to win. "They learn that the more they play, the better they get, which is true with anything," Gray said.

"There's a whole lot that goes into making a game successful," Gray said, "such as packaging, photography, and promotion. Even I have to do things to sell my games like make my boss laugh."

"When putting together a project I have to make sure it's fun to play," Gray said. For instance Scrabble is boring for four people because the wait between turns is too long, he said. "It's important to keep people's interest by testing their memory or supplying catch-up features to help the person who is behind," he said.

Milton Bradley has been manufacturing a lot of games centered around war, but Gray said he won't make games involving nuclear weapons or Vietnam. "They're too close to home," he said.

Rocky Horror toasts UConn

By Ron Eckert
Daily Campus Staff

What do you say about a movie audience that brings its own props? What can you say about a movie audience that throws rice, water and toast at each other? And what kind of movie would they go to see?

You might want to ask Charlie Acuna—he's seen the show 202 times.

The show is the Rocky Horror Picture Show. It will be playing on campus this Friday at the R.O.T.C. building at 8:00 p.m. and midnight.

Acuna is a member of The Cast. Most theaters in the country that play the movie have a regular group of actors that perform all the scenes in the movie as they happen on the screen.

Acuna, who plays Brad, said the movie never changes, it merely sets the stage; the Cast and the audience perform. "The fact that the people participate" makes the movie special, he said.

Perhaps the greatest testimony to Rocky Horror's unique appeal is that when you try to explain it to someone who has never seen it—a virgin in Rocky Horror jargon—the words are hard to find.

"There's not really a plot. A couple end up going to a castle when their car gets a flat tire...there's really not a plot...I can't explain it," Acuna said. He finally described it as a fantasy-type science fiction movie . . . sort of.

Don't expect to see Rocky Horror in your video store any time soon. "It was a flop" when it was first released, Acuna said. But "it's the only [cult film] that keeps the audiences going," he said. Thirteen years ago the film cost $1.25 million; since then the movie has earned $60 million

These two performances will mark Acuna's 9th and 10th show at UConn. Acuna and his cast are from the Groton area, and perform weekly at a Groton theater.

Acuna likes being in The Cast because he gets to "meet a lot of people." Sometimes one cast will host an acting group from another theater, he said.

Acuna has been with The Cast since 1983. The average age of the group's members is about 19, Acuna said.

Like everything else, Acuna said casts differ in ability. "Some casts are good. Some are not," he said.

After 202 showings of the film Acuna says that "something different happens everytime. But if you didn't participate, it would get boring."

Wolf art displayed

An exhibition of the recent, finished paintings and prints of Richard W. Wolf will be displayed at Eastern Connecticut State University's Akus Gallery on Monday, Feb. 23.

The show depicts individual artists and musicians. The exhibition will feature acrylics on canvas and unusually large wood cuts which emphasize the woods' grain and texture.

Wolf, a Willimantic resident and member of Eastern's art faculty since 1966, teaches drawing, printing and art history. He studied at the Art Institute of Buffalo, the State University of New York at Buffalo, and the University of Iowa before receiving his M.F.A. at Cranbrook Academy of Art in Michigan.

Wolf's work was recently shown in Hartford and has also been included in exhibitions in New York, Maine, and Iowa. He has been showing his work for more than 30 years.

An opening reception will be held on Feb. 23 from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Akus Gallery.

The Akus is located on the lower level of Hurley Hall on Eastern's north campus. Gallery hours are 2 to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From the Hip is a success

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press Writer

Courtroom movies usually come in two categories: the serious ("Witness from the Prosecution," "Judgment at Nuremberg") and the comical ("Adam's Rib," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town").

The new release by De Laurentiis Entertainment Group, "From the Hip," has the audacity to attempt both. The verdict: a success on both counts.

Robin Weathers (Judd Nelson) is suffering through his first year with a staid Boston law firm. He considers himself a mixture of Perry Mason, Clarence Darrow and F. Lee Bailey, but he is clerking at the bottom of the ladder. He stages a scene at an office birthday party, and his nerve earns him the chance to try a losing assault case.

The young attorney amazes everyone with his courtroom pyrotechnics, winning the case as well as the nickname Stormy. Senior partners Darren McGavin and Nancy Marchand want to rid the firm of the infamous Stormy Weathers, but economic matters intervene. They find a case that will certainly bring his downfall.

A college professor (John Hurt) has been accused of murdering a call girl, and the evidence seems conclusive. Weathers thinks he can win an acquittal, but then he frets over the question: Is Professor Bennoit really guilty? The answer comes in the startling climax.

As a director, Bob Clark has had a wildly deverse career, ranging from "Porky's" and "Rhinestone" to "A Christmas Story" and "Murder by Decree." He redeems himself with "From the Hip," which he co-wrote with attorney David E. Kelley and co-produced with Rene Dupont. Clark's handling of the courtroom drama, and comedy, is inspired.

Judd Nelson takes a huge leap forward in his still-young career; his outrageous Stormy Weathers commands the screen

Guthrie Theater brings Candida to Jorgensen

The Guthrie Theater, one of the foremost regional theaters in America, will bring "Candida", the timeless play of George Bernard Shaw, to Jorgensen Auditorium on Tuesday, Feb. 24 at 8:00 p.m.

One can imagine the characters transplanted into the 1980's, handling any situation with ease due to the superb manner in which they are portrayed by this troupe.

Since its founding in 1963, the Guthrie Theater has enjoyed a reputation as the leading classical repertory theater in the United States, as well as carrying an international reputation for excellence. The Guthrie Theater has attracted audiences, critics, and theater artists the world over since its inception 24 years ago.

George Bernard Shaw's "Candida" is a witty variation on the timeless theme of the lover's triangle. Throughout the play, Shaw shows Candida to be the serene master of her often confusing situation; she is the ideal woman for two totally different men. When she finally chooses between them, she does so in a manner that underscores Shaw's feminism and his skill at making the ordinary extraordinary.

The Guthrie Theater has taken "Candida" beyond the conventional and has infused it with more life than it has had in many years. All of Shaw's supposed faults are embraced and pushed crazily into unexpected directions, becoming sparkling additions to the emotions that pulsate among the characters and audience as well.

The talent and ingenuity of this Guthrie production is almost dangerous for the way it is treated. Characters are not allowed to be static. They become immensely funny and highly entertaining, yet at the same time they are unabashed mouthpieces to Shaw's examination of ideas which remain intensely relevant today.

The Guthrie Theater's rendition of Candida is outrageously and amazingly portrayed. No audience will escape the quality of this production as it brilliantly combines Shaw's lyrical sensibilities and his sharp sense of humor. It is both witty and wise, yet slightly mysterious as well.

Tickets for the February 24 production of Candida by the Guthrie Theater at Jorgensen Auditorium are $10, $8, $5, and $3 for the general public, with discounts available for students and senior citizens.

Tickets can be purchased at the Jorgensen Box Office Monday through Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For more information call the Jorgensen Box Office at 486-4226.

delighted until he sees the name of the victim. It turns out that Nanki-Poo, who has been masquerading as a minstrel, is really the Mikado's son. Ko-Ko is sentenced to be boiled in oil for bringing about the death of the heir apparent.

In order for everything to turn out well for Ko-Ko, he is going to have to try and get Katisha to marry him and forget about Nanki-Poo. When the Mikado returns, he finds his son alive and Ko-Ko married to Katisha and he declares that "nothing could possibly be more satisfactory."

The short dialogues and slapstick comedy performed by the characters comprised most of the humor of the play because the audience had trouble hearing and deciphering the words that the characters were singing. Only a few of the characters were able to project their voices effectively.

The cast as a whole seemed to be comprised of very capable and talented singers but they were restricted in the fact that, since the play is an operetta, they had to sing in an operatic voice.

The play mentioned Japanese names and places and made references to many well known people. The fact that one character lived in Eagleville and another was the owner of a Carvel store, and references to Nixon and Vanna White made the play more enjoyable, especially for the locals.

One character who seemed to steal the scene every time he was on stage was Poo-Bah. He was the one who took over all the jobs and salaries of the nobles after Ko-Ko took over. He also had the names of all the positions written on his fan, something that he showed every chance he got. The fact that he weighed close to 300 pounds also helped to lend humor to his character, especially when attempting to stand up or sit down.

The other characters also had attributes that made them unique. Ko-Ko was so small that he couldn't lift the executioner's axe much less cut anyone's head off with it. Katisha, an ugly and somewhat overweight woman, was willing to admit that her face was plain but her elbows and shoulder blades were something to behold. She also forced Ko-Ko to admit that there was some beauty in bloodthirstiness while waving her blue, two inch fingernails in his face.

The sets and costumes were both well done and something to behold. All of the men and women were dressed in gaily colored kimonos and each carried an equally colorful fan. The Mikado's kimono was the most ornate, black with gold highlights, thus befitting his position. The Mikado's was something compared with the patched outfit that Nanki-Poo first showed up in.

The sets were as well done as the costumes. The backdrop was a painting of the Japan countryside and the garden had everything from trees to a bridge over a small stream.

All in all, the show was entertaining for everyone in the audience to hear and see. The score was both bright and demur wherever the action of the play called for it. Even though the words were sometimes hard to hear, the songs were witty and enjoyable.

as well as the courtroom. He even keeps stride with John Hurt, who has a stunning role as the supremely confident professor. Elizabeth Perkins as Nelson's roommate provides the needed prods to the attorney's conscience as well as confidence.

The supporting cast is impeccable, especially Darren McGavin, Nancy Marchand and Alan Arbus as the senior lawyers, Dan Monahan and David Alan Grier as Weathers' confederates, and Ray Walston as an apoplectic judge.

"From the Hip" is that rare movie that cuts across all age groups and can be enjoyed for its surface values as well as its commentary on the legal system.

Rated PG, mostly for language. Running time is 111 minutes

Smurfy,
As you know I let it show
That I'm the one for you,
You make me laugh,
You make me smile
And this you always do
So if you'll be my valentine
I'll be sure and make you see
That I'm the Sweetest Valentine
That there could ever be.
I LOVE YOU!
Happy Valentine's Day!
Little One

Mr. Wonderful,
It's very hard to write,
in words the way I feel.
But to me you are so special,
and this I can't conceal.
So being that it's Valentine's,
I want to let you know
That I really, really love you,
and I want to let it show!
Happy Valentine's Day
Love, Spike

George, you little sweetheart, happy birthday a little early. Love, Brown to the Bone.

There once was a girl named Lester,
And a guy named John who impressed her,
John's feelings for this gal were quite reciprocal so between them a strong love did fester.

Lily of Hamilton House, Merry Valentine's Day! You are without a doubt the most fun raquetball partner I've ever had. Keep enjoying life. Love, Paul

Laura D. the wonderful THETA receptionist, Happy Valentine's Day. Love, Paul

Ricky, Happy Valentine's Day Sweetheart! Hugs and kisses. Love, Maura

We know love by this, that He laid down His life for us. For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God. The wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord, that whoever believes may in Him have eternal life. He who hears My word, and believes Him who sent Me, has eternal life, and does not come into judgement, but has passed out of death into life. An hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and those who hear shall live. You search the scriptures, because you think that in them you have eternal life; And it is these that bear witness of Me, and you are unwilling to come to Me, that you may have life. You know full well that the day of the Lord will come just like a theif in the night, while they say, "Peace and Safety". If we say that we have no sin, we are deceiving ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins. There is salvation in noone else; for there is no other name under heaven that has been given Among me, by which we must be saved. Everything previous to this is scripture. In the book Isaiah Chapter 53 a savior is described. Decide for yourself who it is. I already have. "I know love by this, that He laid down His life for me". I love God with all my heart. I believe in Christ Jesus as my Lord and my Savior. You don't have to believe it. I didn't have to either. But I do. For all of you who have asked me why I am so happy: It is because of Him. I don't always say it- But He is Always the reason. With love from Anita- A UConn pharmacy student. P.S. It took alot of courage to print this- But it took alot more to die on a cross for something He didn't do, in place of someone He has always loved.

Girls, be careful in Psych. class. You just might meet a gut and fall in love with him. I love you sweetheart/ Polar Bear/ Pepper Man! You're the most handsome, sweetest person in the world. (And you're not a bad cook, either!) Love always, Tiger. P.S. Congratulations on law school

Wench-Feeler Staff: For Valentines Day, I wish to you: Richard... a day without a staff ARGUE-MENT (but may not ... you'd be BORED with all that PEACE and QUI-ET), To Amy some CHEESE on which to NIBBLE, to KAREN a date with JEEP MAN to make you GIGGLE, to Cass a box of RAINBOW CRAYONS for your EXOTIC (EROTIC) COLLECTION, to David no more OBNOXIOUS OBJECTIONS (or WOMANLY REJECTIONS . . . slap!) to honorary Ann a KOSHER hug from her NO CHEESEBURGER MAN, and to "Mr. McSWEENEY "because we at Wench-Feeler like you so much we've decided to make you one of the "NICE SKIN" bunch! To all of my staff both NEAR and FAR away ... have a HAPPY CUPID'S DAY!
Pollysyllabicly Yours,
Ronda

Joe, whassup slice? This is probably the only personal you'll get, so enjoy it!! Looking forward to happy hour Friday!!

TO BRAD (Eddy 1st floor) Just want you to know you're the hottest guy around. A Secret Admirer

DEAR LITTLE POO,
IT SEEMS SILLY ASKING YOU TO BE MY VALENTINE FOR THIS ONE SPECIAL DAY, WHEN FOR THE LAST 4 YEARS, 5 MONTHS, AND 9 DAYS YOU HAVE BEEN ALL I HAVE EVER WANTED IN A WOMAN: MY LOVER, FRIEND, INTELLECTUAL PARTNER, CONFIDANTE, AND THE MOST LOVING, COMPATIBLE PERSON THAT I COULD EVER HOPE TO FIND!
OUR RELATIONSHIP IS BEYOND DREAMS, AND I JUST THOUGHT I'D DROP YOU THIS LITTLE NOTE TO LET YOU KNOW THAT NOT ONE DAY PASSES WHEN I DON'T COUNT MY BLESSINGS. I LOVE YOU!
THE OTHER HALF OF THE UNIT...
BIG POO

DON: You may not be with me, but you're forever on my mind. Time and distance may challenge us, but only a deeper love will we find. I love you.
— DIANE

RICK — You were right about risk taking! I really had a blast trying to break the bobsled record with you! Maybe we'll be more successful next time?? Happy Valentine's Day!
Beth

My Dearest Dan: If I can't see your face, I will remember your smile.. You're the finest thing I've seen in all my life.. You bring me joy... You're my joy...Happy Valentine's Day, Babe. I love you more than words can say. you're my joy. Liz

DEAR KATIE: I WANT TO WISH YOU A HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY. I HOPE THIS SURPRISES YOU. OH, BY THE WAY, I LOVE YOU VERY MUCH. EVEN THOUGH YOUR HAIR IS BLACK. GENE

Happy Valentine's Day Mary. You mean more to me than all the fish in the sea. I'm forever in love with you. Let's hope time is on our side. Love, Luke

EDDY 6TH: HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY TED! LOVE ALWAYS, JEN

BROCK 4TH — NICOLE, JODI, DEB, CHRIS, ERIN, SALLY AND KAREN! HAPPY VALENTINE'S YOU GUYS!

Lindy, Happy Valentine's Day. Love the SS with the Adonis future

Luke, (Watson) I'm glad we met! I would really like to get to know you better. Happy Valentine's Day!!! From the girl who snapped your walkman Monday afternoon

Angie Dawne,
You can't get too personal in the personals so why don't we go get personal elsewhere? Happy Valentine's Day!
DJC

HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY TO OUR FAVORITE CRAZY GUYS IN TRUMBULL HOUSE: FRANK, DAVE, STEVE, GORDO, PETE, DAVE, NICK, AND KEVIN. LOVE CHRISTINE AND MARIANN

Kris, thanks for being there for me when I needed you. I'm happy everything's working out. You'll always be my Valentine (even though you're not mental). Love, Tom

Ken, Here's to more smiles, laughter, and good memories. Thanks for everything. Happy Valentine's Day sweetheart. Always, Beth

To the opiated firewitch with the flashing black eyes and the mischievious smile. Harrison Ford would find you prettier than Kate Capshaw, David Bowie would find you brighter than Angie, the snake would find you more fun than Nastassja Kinski, but they're all out of luck. It just goes to show, you should always read the personals. My less than monstrous study monster, do they allow ear-nibbling in the library? Is it hard to read an Econ. textbook when apples, pears and bananas are floating around the page? Do you know how much I like you? I hope you re better soon. wimper, wimper

Tuppence,
I know I don't say it enough but in my heart I truly love you. Happy Valentine's Day!
From your best friend, Sasha

Joanne (varsity band T-bone)-
I feel we've become close these past few months. Are you interested? Happy Valentine's Day!
Dan

Dan M. (BEAP 273) Happy Valentine's Day! From the girl who missed class on Tuesday

Dawny, If this isn't proof that I'm a nice guy, I don't know what is. Don't worry, I won't embarrass you. Just wanted to say Happy Valentine's Day dear. You're welcome. Love, Chris Doug E. Fresh, Roses are red, violets are blue: A Valentine's wish from me to you. Thirty days from now we'll be having a great fun, while havin' a sunsplash in the Jamican sun! Chilly Chill.

Dearest Dora, your dedication is to be commended because it is a fine thing. You're a very kind, adorable person— good luck with your resumé and shopping. Sincerely, Peter.

Tay, Here's to our first Valentine's Day. I know there'll be many more. You've made my past semesters unforgettable. I love you, AAA

Jim (darling, honey)- I'm glad you were persistent at the start. Happy 6 months and Valentine's Day. I LOVE YOU!! (now it's in print and public, OH NO!!) Love your P.P. and EVOL.

Kurt in Buckley — You should really close the shade while you're dressing — you never know who could be watching! Happy Valentines Day!!

Frankie — Belden 2nd floor:
You're still MY special best friend.
Happy Valentines Day.
Love, Tracy

DEAREST BLONDE KIM,
THIS one's to you! HAPPY VALENTINES DAY! Thanks for everything over the past five months. You make me very happy. I'm really looking forward to this semester and this summer. Only four more weeks until Ft. Lauderdale! Yo te quiero!
CHRIS

Lynn and Karen (Hale 2nd) — If all my visits turn out like the last one, don't expect me to come knocking on your door too often. Happy Valentines Day anyway.
— Sam

There once was a man named Hugh
Whose friendship I never really knew
But his good looks made me blush
And with a harmless little push
He could throw my equilibrium askew
R.

Karen — Buckley 3rd: This is already proving to be a fun semester. Thanks for being my roommate. You're the first normal one I've had! Ha! Ha! Love — Melissa

To the pledges of TBS: I am so psyched for this season! I can tell already that you will be great additions to the sisterhood! Keep up the good work and relax! Love — Melissa

Amanda & Bob — (Beecher & Vinton): We still love both of you! Happy Valentines Day! Thanks for being "real" sisters both of you! Love — Melissa & Christopher Christopher— there are so many things I could say—Thank you for understanding when no one else can! You really are special to me and even though I don't and can't show it enough—I really love you. Thanks for showing me what it really means! Love always— Melissa.

NOW-WE'LL PAY YOU TO ATTEND MEDICAL SCHOOL

In fact, we'll even pay you more than $600 a month while you attend. That's in addition to paying for your tuition, required books and fees.

It's all part of the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. And here is how it works!

If you're selected for a Physician's Scholarship—from the Army, Navy, or Air Force—you're commissioned as an officer in the Reserves.

While you're in school, you'll serve 45 days a year on active duty, gaining valuable medical experience. After graduation, you will serve three or more years, the length depending on the requirements of the Service selected and years of scholarship assistance received.

As an Armed Forces physician you'll receive officer's pay and benefits, and enjoy the advantages of working regular hours. You'll also see a diversity of patients and have opportunities to use sophisticated medical technology.

But most important, while you're in medical school we'll help pay the bills. For more information, send in this coupon. There is no obligation.

YES! Tell me how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help pay my medical school expenses. I understand there is no obligation.
Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box 2865
Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102 9010

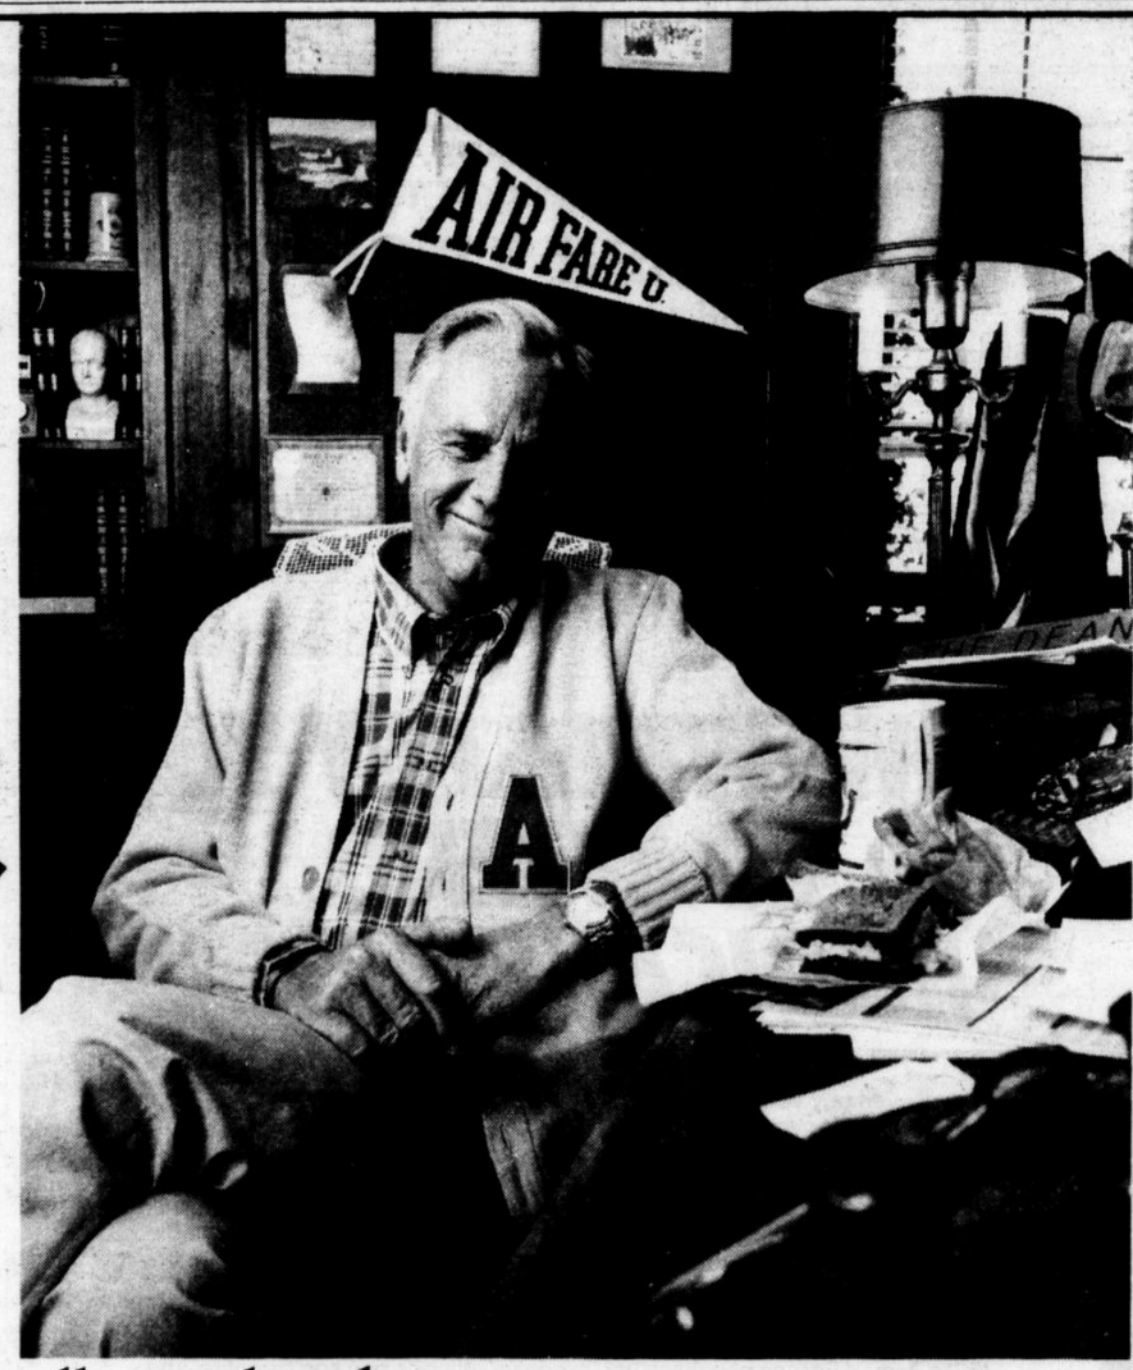
A Memo From The Dean Of Student Air Fares.



Hi, I'm your Dean, McLean Stevenson.

And I've got some great news about this year's Spring Break.

You can afford it.

Without having to sell your books, your stereo, or your roommate. You see, I represent Piedmont Airlines and I know how you can fly for as much as 70% off regular coach fares. Just as long as you book well in advance.

Which means you and your friends can party in any of the 150 cities coast to coast that Piedmont flies to.

So, if you really want this year's Spring Break to be very memorable, yet very affordable, get to your local travel agent or call Piedmont at 1-800-251-5720 and start researching it now. Because you can't cram for low airfares.

Bird says drugs will never go away from NBA

By Bill Barnard
Associated Press Writer

Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics, although a strong supporter of the NBA's anti-drug policy, says the league will never be free of drugs.

"There are always some guys you can't control, but if you can help a few, it's worth it," Bird said. "But believing there can be a drug-free league is just naive."

It is Bird's belief that despite the NBA's anti-drug policy, there are probably some players who are so drug dependent that no amount of education or penalties will help them.

On Jan. 13, Mitchell Wiggins and Lewis Lloyd, both of the Houston Rockets, were permanently suspended by the NBA for cocaine use. Michael Ray Richardson and John Drew had received similar penalties a year earlier.

Bird said he was not sorry to see Wiggins and Lloyd go because, in his opinion, they betrayed other NBA players.

"The league needed something like this to happen because it woke people up," Bird said. "It was too bad for the guys it happened to, but they didn't care about our league."

But Bird, like other players, believes the league's campaign to combat drug abuse is helping - to a point.

"The drug situaition may be better than a few years ago, but it's still a problem because drugs are so prevalent in society," said Detroit's Isiah Thomas, one of the spokesman for the league's 'Don't Foul Out' education program. "It's not just a problem for athletes, it's even a problem in the White House."

"There's a percentage of every section and segment of life that takes drugs, and we (in basketball) have our percentage, too," Dallas' Mark Aguirre said. "I think it's a lower percentage than what's publicized, but we're nationally known and we get publicity when we falter."

Aguirre said the widely held belief that athletes are more vulnerable to drug abuse because they are well paid is a myth.

"Money is not really an issue," Aguirre said. "If you're a user, you'll get drugs if you have $20 or $100,000."

Several players - John Lucas, Walter Davis, Quintin Dailey and Chris Washburn - have been given NBA-sponsored treatment for coming forward and admitting their drug problems.

The anti-drug program, announced jointly in October 1983 by the NBA Players Association and then-Commissioner Larry O'Brien, gives players two chances to come forward for treatment of illegal drug use.

The first time a player is treated, he is given his full salary during the time of rehabilitation; the second time, he is suspended without pay; and the third time, he can be banned indefinitely from the NBA, with the possibility of reinstatement in two years.

This policy, NBA players agreed during interviews at the All-Star Game, is acting as a deterrent and they are pleased that the league took a stand against drugs.

"Four guys had their careers killed and players know now that they have to be careful," said Akeem Olajuwon, who had been a teammate of Wiggins and Lloyd on the Rockets.

"The drug problem is not as bad as it was earlier," Denver's Alex English said. "Guys are more aware of the consequences. Wiggins and Lloyd were an example to everyone."

"The drug situation is going to get better," Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers said. "Not letting guys play is a serious step. Other sports leagues talk about it, but don't do enough about it. In the NBA, guys realize that if they get caught, it's over."

"The league put its foot down and set standards," Chicago's Michael Jordan said. "Players can only learn from these examples."

loose with the knowledge that they have nothing to lose.

"They have nothing to worry about," Kirtland said, "They are just playing the role of a spoiler. We have everything to lose, and they have everything to gain."

One last problem facing the Huskies going into this game is that some key players will be playing with injuries. Todd Krygier, currently tied with Harry Geary for leading scorer on the team, hurt his right wrist during last Saturday's game against North Adams.

Third-leading scorer Paul Belliveau will be playing with a hurt shoulder, and Peter Heine did not practice yesterday because of a hurt shoulder.

Luckily, there is a bright side.

Last weekend the Huskies turned in two of their best games of the season, with victories over Rochester Institute of Technology and North Adams State.

Also, unlike the last game against New England,the Huskies will be playing at home. Last Friday, against RIT, a hearty crowd of 400 cheered the team on.

"Our crowd was definately a major factor in that game," Krygier said. "In a couple of away games this year, we've been ahead but the crowd has been against us and the momentum turned. At home, the crowd gets you psyched up."

With a good effort tommorrow night, the Huskies should not have any problem with this team; but anything less could mean a problem for them.

"We have to approach this game as we approached North Adams and RIT," Kirtland said, "with each line doing what they have to one shift at a time, one period at a time. If we do that there is no doubt in my mind that if we think that way then we'll be in good shape. But if we look beyond New England, we could be in trouble."

is 5-9 senior guard Tammi Sweet, who is ranked fifth nationally with an 87.1 free throw percentage, including 27-for-28 from the line in conference play.

Najarian and senior guard Tammi Sweet can both go over the 800-point career mark this weekend. Najarian has scored 798 career points and should go over the 800 mark against Villanova tonight. She got 550 of those points at South Carolina where she played from 1983-1985 before transferring to UConn.

Sweet has 766 career points and could possibly reach 800 against the University of Hew Hampshire Saturday night.

New Hampshire's record stands at 12-5. UNH and UConn last faced each other in 1985, when UConn won at the field house 66-48. UConn will be trying to stop UNH's top players 6-2 sophmore center

Kris Kinney who's averaging 20.5 points and 7.9 rebounds a game, and 5-5 junior guard Karen Pinkos, who averages with 10.2 points and 5.0 assists per game.

DiMaggio OK after getting pacemaker

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Legendary New York Yankees slugger Joe DiMaggio was released Thursday from a hospital after a pacemaker implant, a spokeswoman said.

DiMaggio, 72, returned to his West Palm Beach home following a nine-day stay at Mount Sanai Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Judy Stanton.

DiMaggio checked into the hospital Feb. 3 for treatment of arythmia, an abnormally slow heartbeat. Dr. Phillip Samett, chief of cardiology at Mount Sanai, performed the implant surgery last week and DiMaggio recovered without complications, Stanton said.

Men swimmers host BC

By Jim Amspacher
Daily Campus Staff

The men's swim team will be looking to snap a three meat losing streak tonight, when it faces Boston College at 7 p.m. in Brundage Pool. UConn comes into the meet with a 7-6 record while the Eagles are at 9-2.

The Huskies most recent loss came last Saturday at the hands of Division II powerhouse Southern Connecticut 122-94.

In that meet, senior Duncan Sikes was UConn's lone double winner, taking first in the 100-meter freestyle and 200-meter breaststroke. Senior co-captain Bob Bowes, one of the team's most consistent performers all year also got a win in the 200-meter butterfly.

Boston College won their last meet at Central Connecticut , Tuesday. The Eagles will be hoping for big meets from their top players, senior captain and freestyler Robert Ayala and senior Jonathan Blood, who swims the backstroke.

UConn has one regular season meet left Monday at 7 p.m. at home against Springfield College.

Next the team will travel to the University of Pittsburgh, Feb. 18-21 for the Big East Championships. The Huskies wind up the year Feb. 27-28 at the New England Championships at Springfield College.

George burns course for 63

By Bob Green
Associated Press Writer

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — George Burns birdied nine holes en route to a 9-under-par 63 that gave him a one-shot lead Thursday after the first round of the $500,000 Andy Williams Open golf tournament.

Veteran J.C. Snead, who scored consecutive victories in this tournament in 1975-76, made eagle-3 on the final hole for a 64 that tied him with Lon Hinkle for second. Hinkle also scored an eagle, holing out a wedge shot for a 2 on the fourth hole.

Burns' bogey-free effort set a record on the North course at Torrey Pines, at 6,659 yard the shorter and easier of the two courses used for the first two rounds of this tournament.

" When I make 'em, I usually make 'em in droves," Burns said of the nine birdies he scattered across his card.

He hit all the greens and reached three of the par-5s in two.

U.S. Open champ Ray Floyd, who played in the same threesome with Burns, was tied at 65 with Dave Eichelberger, South African Bobby Cole and rookie Jay Don Blake.

All played the North course, which has posted par of 72. That, suggest Burns, may be a little generous.

"The par 5s played dramatically down wind, and that brings par back down to about 70," Burns said.

Defending champion Bob Tway was unable to take advantage of the relatively easy course, however, and had to be content with a 71.

The hockey team has gone into every game for the past two weeks knowing that it has to win, and tommorow night's game against New England College is no exception.

The Huskies are currently in seventh place in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Eastern Division with an 8-8-2 division record. Norwich Academy is close behind them with an 8-8 record.

The top eight teams in the division are elligible for the playoffs, and as things stand now, UConn is a good bet to finish in seventh or eighth.

But there is a catch. In order to be eligible for the playoffs, a team has to have at least a .500 record against the ECAC East and West Division teams. To maintain that, the Huskies will have to win two of their next three division games.

Which brings us back to New England College. They are currently in 13th place in the ECAC East with a 4-12-1 record. The huge distance between these two teams initially makes it seem like this game should be a given for UConn. However, there are a number of things that have to be considered before the victory is counted.

First, the last time these teams met, in Hannicker New Hampshire, they played to a 3-3 overtime tie. That game was also expected to be a victory for the Huskies, but continued penalty trouble, and a hot goalie changed the game.

Another factor that adds some suspense to this game is that coach Ben Kirtland doesn't feel the team has been playing well in practice this week.

"We've had two lackluster practices the past two days," Kirtland said. "Intensity and concentration levels have been down, and right now I'm not all that confident going into this game."

Looking at past performances this season can only add to the coach's worries because the team has had a nasty habit of playing down to weaker opponents. The Huskies have lost two games to American International College, who is currently in 14th place in the Eastern Division with a 4-15-2 record. They have also lost to Division III Connecticut College.

Another point to be considered is that while UConn will be playing with the weight of the playoffs on its shoulders, New England will be

Women's basketball hosts two

The woman's basketball team has two tough games this weekend. Friday night against Villanova and Saturday against New Hampshire. They get the tough one out of the way first.

UConn has a lot going against it as it prepares to face their Big East rival tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the field house.

The 20th-ranked Wildcats are coming off their first conference loss of the season. Villanova was upset 67-65 by Providence on Wednesday.

The loss snapped the Wildcats' 14-game winning streak.

The Huskies have never beaten Villanova. The Wildcats lead the series 10-0.

Villanova is first place in the Big East with a 12-1 record, 20-3 overall. UConn is fourth in the Big East with a 7-5 record, 11-10 overall.

Villanova has two-time Big East player-of-the-year Shelly Pennefather, who leads the Conference in scoring with 23.5 points per game and is second in rebounding with 9.4 per game.

Freshman Heidi Robbins, the team's fourth leading scorer and a key performer, is questionable for tonight's game.

Today is Friday the 13th.

You get the idea?

What the Huskies do have going for them is a little streak of their own. UConn has won four of its last five games, and is coming off a 74-73 overtime win at Georgetown.

They also have red-hot junior forward Renee Najarian, who's averaging 21.3 points and 11.6 rebounds over the last three games, and leads the Big East in rebounding.

Another plus for the Huskies
